

Employee Empowerment

© 2009 – Club Resources International

Club Resources
INTERNATIONAL

Copyright 2009
Club Resources International

For internal use only at the purchasing club or organization.
Materials purchased from the Club Resources International website are for the exclusive use of the purchaser, individually or as an organization, and may not be reproduced, copied, distributed or resold to others, individually or collectively, outside the purchasing organization.

Disclaimer

All information in purchased documents is provided for guidance only. Club Resources International makes no legal representation as to their accuracy or efficacy. Purchasers should always review personnel and financial matters with their professional legal and financial advisors.

Table of Contents

Introduction 1

I Value Your People 3

II Share Your Vision 5

III Share Your Goals 7

IV Trust Your People 9

V Provide Guidelines and Information for Empowered Behavior . . . 11

VI Provide Frequent Feedback 13

VII Focus on Problem Solution; Not Placing Blame 15

VIII Recognize and Reward Empowered Behavior 17

IX Implementing and Fostering Empowerment 19

X The Many Ways to “Kill” Empowerment 22

Conclusion 24

Appendix A: Sample Empowerment Guidelines 25

Appendix B: Sample Service Issue Resolution Form 26

INTRODUCTION

Employee empowerment became a corporate buzzword in the Nineties and the consensus in the business press was that it was a good thing. Many companies claimed to empower their employees, but claiming to do so and actually doing it are two very different matters.

Instead of the traditional view that employees are easily replaceable elements in an organization, people who must be trained to do narrow, well-defined tasks and who must be closely watched and supervised at all times, the concept of empowerment says that today's more educated and sometimes more sophisticated employees need and want to contribute more to their employer and workplace. Yet many businesses marginalize their employees by refusing to listen to them and by failing to let them contribute to the enterprise in any meaningful way.

A few companies have truly embraced the concept of empowerment and have discovered the immense power and synergy that can be unleashed when employees participate more fully in their operations. Any employee at a Ritz-Carlton hotel can spend up to $2,000 a day per guest to solve problems and not just satisfy their guests, but to wow them with "legendary" service.

Further, highly successful companies who engage their employees in developing work processes and continual process improvement have discovered that these empowered employees make indispensable partners in delivering service. Not only do they have a greater stake in the enterprise and are more fully committed to and responsible for their work, they actually equate their purpose and success with that of their company.

Motivation and morale in such companies is sky-high without gimmicks or periodic campaigns by management. These employees are energized by their involvement and sense of contribution. Again, we point to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Company, whose employees are passionate about their service to guests and fellow employees and whose loyalty to their employer is as legendary as their service.

"Without empowerment, an organization will never be a service leader.
Empowerment is the most critical skill an employee
can master and a company can drive in order to lure and keep customers."

John Tschohl

Yet it takes more than telling employees they can spend money to solve problems to reap the benefits of employee empowerment. Establishing a culture of empowerment requires the necessary leadership and culture to nourish and sustain it.

Managers must also be secure enough in their positions and knowledge to be open to employee ideas, while employees must understand the framework and guidelines of their empowerment. Within defined limits, employees must be free to use their creativity and ingenuity to improvise and solve member problems – the extent of which management can never fully anticipate nor create sufficient contingency instructions.

What is Employee Empowerment?

So what are empowered employees and how can they help your club meet its Mission and Vision? In the simplest terms empowered employees are viewed as full-fledged partners in your quest for high levels of quality and service. They are encouraged to think, act, and make decisions on their own based on guidelines defined by the club.

The major role that a club makes in empowering its employees is to create a culture where employees are valued and recognized as indispensable partners in the enterprise. It must also understand that to be successful with employee empowerment, employees must fully sense the club's commitment to such empowerment; simply saying that employees are empowered, does not make it so. The club's leaders at all levels must do more than talk the talk.

Leaders must understand that empowerment is not something bestowed on employees like some magical gift given by management to the workers. The leaders' role is to establish both the environment and atmosphere where employees feel their empowerment and are emboldened to make decisions, knowing they have the support and backing of their leaders. While the leaders must clearly lay out for employees the extent of their authority to act and make decisions, the sense of empowerment comes from the employees.

While employee empowerment may be seen as a desirable practice by management, it ultimately can come about only with the recognition by employees that they are empowered. This means that the focus of leaders must not be on what employees are doing to achieve empowerment, but on what they themselves are doing to promote and enable it.

Note: I have used an article by Susan M. Heathfield, a management consultant, entitled Top 10 Principles of Employee Empowerment, as the basic outline for this handbook; and quoted from this article at the beginning of each section.

I – VALUE YOUR PEOPLE

“Your regard for people shines through in all of your actions and words. Your facial expression, your body language, and your words express what you are thinking about the people who report to you. Your goal is to demonstrate your appreciation for each person's unique value. No matter how an employee is performing on their current task, your value for the employee as a human being should never falter and always be visible.”

Susan M. Heathfield

Guidance to Leaders

Clubs need to ensure that their people are valued by stressing empowerment in their Club Values and Culture. Additional guidance can be found in the concept of Service-based Leadership as discussed in Leadership on the Line, a Guide for Front Line Supervisors, Business Owners, and Emerging Leaders.

“We acknowledge each operation as a team of dedicated individuals working toward common goals and we recognize the ultimate value of people in everything we do.”

Operating Standards

“While I may direct employees’ work, their productive effort and well-being serve the interests of the client or club who employs them. Therefore, I must work hard to ensure their maximum contribution to the mission and goals of the Company and club. I can only do this if I value each employee as an individual whose contribution to the collective effort is directly dependent upon my leadership, as well as the tools, training, resources, and support I provide them.”

Managers’ Code of Ethics

“All employees will be treated with dignity and respect.”

Principles of Employee Relations

“As a group of people committed to common goals, you can only achieve your team’s greatest potential by taking advantage of the talent, initiative, and ingenuity of each and every one of your employees. To the extent that any individual is not valued, trained, and motivated, your enterprise suffers.”

Leadership on the Line, p. 50

“People matter! And true leaders understand this.

Leadership on the Line, p. 171

Valuing Your People

What things can a leader do to demonstrate your regard for people “in all your actions and words”?

1. Know and use their names. Everyone likes to be recognized as an individual and be called by name. Certainly your members do, and your employees do as well. Introduce them to members, guests, and visitors, when appropriate. Failing to do so implies they’re just part of the scenery instead of key contributors to the success of your club.

2. Learn about them as individuals. Get to know them, their life situation, their dreams and plans, their goals in life. This does not mean you are to become their friends, but it does mean you have enough interest in them as individuals to try to understand their situation, their needs, and motivations.
3. Greet them daily. You should never fail to greet employees when you see them each day. You don't like to be ignored as if you were unimportant, and neither do they.
4. Share your time with them. As busy as you are, make time for your employees. They have questions, concerns, and needs that should never be ignored. Be open and approachable. When you are not, when they are afraid to come to you for fear of your reaction, you are kept in the dark about what is really going on in your team. If any employee is monopolizing your time or is a "high maintenance" employee, do not be shy about letting him know the inappropriateness of his behavior.
5. Recognize each as an individual. None of us is the perfect employee, manager, server, cart attendant, etc. Don't expect your employees to be. Learn each person's strengths and weakness. Capitalize on the strengths and help each person overcome their weaknesses. The time you invest in helping an employee develop his or her skills and abilities is well worth the effort and will be appreciated far more than you'll ever realize.
6. Be involved in the workplace and work processes. Do not create a hostile work environment by failing to adequately communicate with your employees. Without your ongoing guidance and direction, petty dissensions and friction will grow among the workers of your team as they struggle to figure out what they must do and who must do what.
7. Look out for their welfare. Make sure your employees get adequate work breaks, that their workspaces are set up for comfort and efficiency, that they are properly trained and equipped for their jobs, that you adjust work schedules when possible to meet individual needs, that you resolve pay discrepancies quickly, that you get back to them to resolve issues they've raised. Make sure they understand their benefits, taking the time to explain the details to them. Encourage them to participate in the club's 401(k) Retirement Plan, showing how even small contributions can build up over time.
8. Treat them as adults. When you treat employees like children, they will act like children. Don't talk down to them or treat them like they're stupid. When you give people responsibility, most will reward your trust. Those who demonstrate they can't be trusted should be encouraged to move on.
9. Show them respect. This is critically important in the way you speak to them, the tone of your voice, your choice of words, and your body language. Your respect for them cannot be faked. You must sincerely value people to treat them with respect at all times.
10. Do not take advantage of them. Employees are not your servants and should not be expected to perform personal services for you. If you delegate tasks, make sure there is value in it for them, either in enhanced compensation or a genuine learning opportunity.
11. Thank them often. How easy is it to say, "Thank you"? It cost nothing and it reaps great rewards. The only requirement is that it must be sincerely given.
12. Say goodbye at the end of the day or shift. A farewell is a common courtesy that you would extend to family and friends, if for no other reason than as an acknowledgement of departure. The members of your work team, who you depend upon for your success, should receive no less of a courtesy. Again, the need for sincerity is absolute.

*To purchase the full copy of this document,
please visit the CRI Marketplace.*